An orientation for new senators will occur on September 12th. New senators will have the opportunity to ask questions and to become acquainted with the procedures, structure, and history of the faculty senate.

The president disapproved two pieces of legislation passed by the senate; one in the April meeting and the other in the May meeting. The one from the April meeting was a resolution opposing changes in full time faculty teaching loads for the fall 2013 semester. The other resolution passed by senate and disapproved by the president was the one in May that opposed the eight credit hours per semester limit on teaching loads for part time faculty.

Recently the senate was informed by the administration that notwithstanding the Obama administration's decision to delay enforcement of the Affordable Care Act and employer mandate for one year, the new eight credit hours per semester part time teaching load limit will continue to be enforced.

Also, as a result of the actions of the faculty senate last year, part time faculty were included in the new faculty orientation.

Concerning reaccreditation, on July 11 the Higher Learning Commission formally notified the university that its accreditation had been continued with the next reaccreditation scheduled for 2022/23 but that the university would be subject to interim monitoring and a focused site visit in Spring 2015 on two issues: governance and assessment of student learning.

With regard to assessment, the Higher Learning Commission monitoring and focused site visit seek to ensure that graduate and undergraduate academic majors and the general education program have assessment processes in place that include: A) the skills and concepts to be mastered; B) the assessment methods employed; and C) the analysis and use of results to improve academic programs. This means there's a good deal of work to be done by faculty to develop and implement those assessment processes.

Also in the July 11th letter the Higher Learning Commission states that the 2015 focused site visit "should evaluate the relationships and roles of faculty in shared institutional governance." And in its report the Higher Learning Commission site visit team concludes, "While the university has made substantial progress with shared governance there are still be obstacles and difficulties associated with the interaction between administration and shared governance bodies." The call is for "additional improvements in consultation, transparency and in particular in explaining decisions," noting that the faculty perceive "continued problems of a lack of transparency around administrative/financial decisions." And it suggests that "full implementation of University Council could go a long way toward resolving these concerns," and it recommends that the university administration address, "concerns about how effective the processes that are in place are in providing transparency and a sense of inclusiveness in the operation of the institution particularly with respect to the operation of University Council."

Last month the Senior Vice President and Provost put forward a modification of University Council shared governance mechanism that would eliminate the University Council as a deliberative body, preserving only its eight individual committees and creating a coordinating committee with no policy recommending function. This change would undermine any potential for genuine shared governance that the University Council mechanism offered, as do the faculty senate's elected representatives to the University Council. Later in this meeting the senate will consider the adoption of a resolution objecting to this change.

The Faculty Senate's ad hoc General Education Revision Committee has developed a proposal to reform the university's undergraduate general education requirements. This proposal was distributed by the committee this past spring. Last fall this body passed a resolution affirming that it would not consider any such proposal until each of the affected college faculties have had an opportunity to deliberate and vote on the proposal. The proposal is now before the departmental and college faculties. After each of the affected college faculties have had an opportunity to deliberate and vote on the proposal, the General Education Revision Committee will report the proposal out to the Senate for its consideration, which should occur late this fall or early in the spring.

The board of trustees has a regulation in force concerning faculty workloads. It's a good policy and consistent with the policies of the Ohio Board of Regents as well. Unfortunately, the faculty workload regulation has not been adhered to. It calls for each academic department to develop its own faculty workload guidelines consistent with the requirements of the regulation. These departmental faculty workload policies are to be discipline-specific and reflective of the mission of the department, in particular with the types of academic degree programs the department offers. It is the departmental policies that are to determine individual faculty teaching loads. Not all departments have developed such policies and those without those policies need to develop them this year, and those with such policies should review them if they haven't done so recently. This should be a faculty-driven process.

The widespread increases in individual faculty workloads effected last spring for this fall reflected an implicit decision by the administration to move away from the recent emphasis on research and graduate instruction and toward a renewed emphasis on undergraduate teaching by full time faculty.

The issue of the appropriate balance between teaching and research and between graduate and undergraduate education should be discussed openly by departmental and college faculties rather than driven by a central administrator adjusting individual faculty teaching assignments ad hoc.

As we face administrative mandates and further cuts to departmental budgets, we need to discuss openly the impact of such cuts on the accomplishment of our academic mission. This mission is accomplished mainly within the academic departments of the university. There is concern that those departments are being deprived of resources to such an extent that their ability to accomplish their missions may be seriously impaired.

Review of the Integrated Post-secondary Education Data System (IPEDS), shows that the University of Akron spends less on instruction per full-time equivalent student than do other comparable universities; that the University of Akron’s spending on instruction per full time equivalent student has declined relative to other comparable universities over the most recent five year period for which data are available; that the University of Akron spends much less on student services per full time equivalent student than do other comparable universities; and that in contrast the University of Akron’s spending on institutional support per full-time equivalent student significantly exceeds that of other comparable universities.

President Proenza recently announced his intention to step down as president at the end of June, 2014. As a result there will be a search for a new president during this academic year. The search process for presidents is specified in a Board of Trustees (BOT) regulation. The BOT is the search committee, and will appoint a subcommittee of trustees to initiate the search, screen applicants, and choose finalists. Various constituencies, including the faculty, may choose representatives who will be permitted to interview the finalists and meet in executive session with the BOT to express their views about the finalists. There will be six faculty representatives, three of whom will be elected by the Faculty Senate and three of whom who will be chosen by the University of Akron chapter of the AAUP.

A presidential search, especially one that occurs near the end of a 14-year presidency, is a time to take stock, reassess the university's current needs, and make institutional course corrections. This reassessment should inform the choice of a new president. During the tenure of the next president the leadership of the university will need to focus intensively and focus resources on the fulfillment of our fundamental academic mission.

III. Special Announcements

Chair Rich reported the deaths of two members of the university community:

Cheryl A. Williamson, Senior Lecturer in the Department of English, died August 11th. She was 62.

Jerome Apple, Accounting faculty at the College of Business Administration, died this past summer. He was 70.

The Senate stood for a moment of silence in memory of our deceased colleagues.

IV. Reports

Executive Committee

Senator Bove reported as follows on behalf of the Executive Committee:

The Faculty Senate Executive Committee held seven meetings since our last gathering on May 2nd and met with the President and Provost three times over the summer months.
On May 16th the EC met to prepare for a meeting with the President and Provost that afternoon. The budget deficit was discussed, as well as part-time faculty teaching load limit, the OBR prescription of a 120-credit designation for baccalaureate degrees, course selection for the Zipstart program, the status of the Office of Multicultural Development, and the Ohio General Assembly budget provision regarding in-state tuition for students issued voter ID documents.

The EC met again on June 3rd and discussed appointments to the standing and ad hoc committees of the Faculty Senate, ratified college senate elections, and approved curriculum proposals reported by the Curriculum Review Committee.

The EC next met on June 20th to prepare for the meeting with the President and Provost later that day. With the President and Provost, the EC discussed student enrollment, budget contingencies, and program modifications in light of the 120 credit hour adjustment. A discussion ensued on possible ways to streamline the curriculum proposal approval process under the likely weight of a very large number of modifications.

On July 11th the EC met to continue discussions of Senate committee appointments and to ratify senate election reports. Many of the election reports were not completed correctly and were returned to the colleges. The EC discussed the OAA proposal to expedite the approval of the 120 credit hour adjustment. The EC is dubious about circumventing the system already in place. The EC also discussed the Affordable Care Act’s impact on part-time faculty and the Senate’s role in college re-organization.

On July 29th the EC met to continue the discussion on appointments to senate committees, as well as enrollment, the budget, and support for part-time faculty orientation.

The EC met again on August 22nd for final approval of senate committee appointments to Academic Policies, Accessibility, Athletics, CCTC, Curriculum Review, Faculty Research, Reference, and Student Affairs committees. The EC also ratified corrected college election reports. It still stands that we are waiting for run-off and corrected election reports. There are several empty seats that would benefit from a college representative. The EC strongly encourages those colleges to execute the required elections and to submit an accurate election report to the Office of the Faculty Senate as soon as possible.

The EC met with the President and Provost later that day and discussed the Presidential search process, updates on the budget, the HLC report, the search for the Asst. Provost for Online Learning, general education reform, part-time faculty teaching load limit, and the implementation of faculty workload policy.

The EC last met on August 29th to prepare the agenda for today’s meeting and to discuss the recent developments with University Council.

The Faculty Senate Executive Committee is empowered to act on behalf of the senate during the summer months, contingent on reporting those items to the senate for ratification. There are two items the EC will bring to this body in October for your approval and ratification:

September 5, 2013
1. The list of curriculum proposals approved by the EC on June 18th.
2. The list of graduates for the summer 2013 Commencement approved by the EC on July 31st.

Remarks of the President
The President began his remarks by welcoming the senators to the beginning of a new academic year and talked of his plans to transition from the presidency back to the faculty for a period of time. The Board of Trustees will first meet as a search committee on September 16th. The President notes that this time of transition can be a time for great opportunity for the campus

The President mentioned that he would like to present a set of proposals to the Senate at the October meeting. This set of proposals will suggest how the university might build upon the processes of program review, streamlining courses, and degree offerings, among other initiatives as well.

The President announced that the University of Akron received a one million dollar grant from the W.M. Keck Foundation, a prestigious foundation sited in Los Angeles that awards funds for advanced research. The grant was awarded to David Simmons, Alamgir Karim and Kevin Cavicchi, for their work on glass formations.

From a survey conducted by Affordable Colleges, the university was noted as offering the greatest lifetime return on investment of any public university in Northeast Ohio.

The university also received the designation as an I-Corps site location by the National Science Foundation.

The President concluded his remarks with an invitation to attend the Annual Forum for Inclusive Excellence on September 9th.

Remarks of the Provost
The Provost began his remarks by declaring that the new first-time full-time bachelor's degree seeking students are better prepared than a previous year by about one unit of measure on the ACT.

The Provost announced that the university welcomed 93 new full time faculty this year (37 TTF, 55 NTTF). There was a redeveloped faculty orientation that included part time faculty.

Enrollment is interconnected with the university’s budgetary circumstances. As of September 2nd, head count was down 6.9% and student credit hours of instruction were down 7.4%. 4.2% of that reduction is the result of actions to improve the outcome of student success at the University of Akron. Of that, 1.6% of that decline results from steps taken to have an appropriate drop date for nonpayment of fees. 1.4% is related to the reduction in credit hours of instruction that have occurred as a result of changes in course credit hours linked to more speedily supporting student completion of degree programs.

Half a percent was related to uniform drop practices implemented last fall. And 0.7% was related to implementing the Pathways for Student Academic Success. 2.2% of that 7.4% reduction was related to an actual decline in enrollment. 1.3% related to other new full time freshman, 0.2% related to part time freshmen and seven tenths of a percent related to transfer students. The final 1% of that 7.4% decline in credit hours of instruction is related to issues of retention and persistence.

The Provost stressed that these numbers have implications for the next fiscal year, which includes a 5% reduction to the academic units and an 8% reduction to the academic support units. The administration is now undertaking a contingency planning exercise because additional budget reductions are inevitable given the fact that enrollment has declined more than that which was projected for the budget approved by the board in early summer.

The board is insisting that at the October meeting the administration present a strategy to assure a balanced budget for fiscal year ’14 and beyond contingent on an anticipated permanent decline in enrollment.

The contingency planning exercise asks units to plan for an 8% reduction during which they are to illustrate the impact of such reduction on program delivery as well as support services and infrastructure services to faculty, staff and students. The final reductions will not be across the board; they’ll be strategic. The reductions will be as purposeful as possible and demonstrate a more effective use of available resources.

The university has reached a tentative agreement with the Akron AAUP. Ratification of that agreement by the Akron AAUP is anticipated for the 13th and by the University of Akron Board of Trustees on the 16th.

The Higher Learning Commission presented the reaccreditation determination to the University of Akron through 2022/23. There will be a focus visit in spring 2015. There will be two items of focus for that visit: assessment and governance.

The Provost asked Dean Midha to work with the faculty to develop an appropriate learning outcomes assessment system, designing such learning outcome assessment methods and mechanisms to align with the redesign of the university’s general education curriculum.

From a governance perspective, the HLC recommended continuing good relationships and effective working activities with the Akron AAUP, the continuation of improving relationships and effective interaction with the faculty senate, and demonstrating an implemented University Council that is represented by a broad based constituency of those at the University of Akron.

When the Higher Learning Commission asked for this type of governance, it clearly asked that the focus be on long term planning and strategies associated with institutional viability. The board of trustees, upon receipt of the initially proposed bylaws for the University Council indicated they would like consideration of an adjustment to those bylaws that would present to them a council that would be more nimble, more responsive and of the greatest extent just in time as appropriate.

Clearly they wanted us to continue to assure and minimize the overlap between the roles and responsibilities of such a council, the faculty senate, and the Akron AAUP.
The Provost presented an alternative approach to the University Council several weeks ago, but clarified that he presented those revisions on behalf of the steering committee of the University Council.
